Chapter 1 by Zygarde Godslayer

The grey and blue raptor climbed out from a small cave in the hill. It was Parast, the Ornitholestes, a medium sized raptor. Parast sniffed the air and walked down the hill into a forest clearing. The hard, frosty earth and tall, snowy pine trees gave an ambiance of cold winter air as Parast strolled along.

He sat down to consider a morning hunt, and his two pack mates clambered out of the nest-cave. Urren and Caris joined him outside and he decided to try to hunt something nearby. He got up and got running, scanning the ground as he went. The pack quickly spotted some Monoclonius tracks, and, following the tracks, found a lone dark blue Monoclonius, separate from any herd. He barked, and Caris ran out from the shrubbery, drawing the giant dinosaur's attention.

The Monoclonius pawed the ground, and faced Caris, who repeatedly called out to attract its attention. Urren ran forward, and ripped into the Monoclonius's back leg, causing it to cry out. It turned, and swung its head into Urren, knocking him flying. He landed in a heap a few feet away.

It prepared to charge, but Caris jumped onto its back and slashed away. Monoclonius bellowed and began jumping about, trying to shake Caris off, but the little Ornitholestes stayed on. Parast charged forward, going for its throat, but it slashed at him with its single horn and he fell to the floor.

His vision turned faded and red, and through it he saw Caris fly off the Monoclonius, and Urren, who had just climbed back up, attempt an attack.

The wounded Ornitholestes staggered forth, but the Monoclonius let out a mighty bellow and impaled Urren through the chest. See more of Story Wars

Parast crawled toward the Monoclonius from behind. It walked forth, and put its foot onto Caris who was collapsed on the floor then pushed down. There was a loud crack, and Caris was crushed to splinters. the giant herbivore turned and walked away down the grassy plain. Parast slowly climbed to his feet, and stealthily followed the Monoclonius as it walked away. The giant ceratopsian quickly began to stagger, becoming weaker from blood loss from the many wounds on its back and the two on its legs, then sat down to rest and try to heal.

Parast snuck up behind it, and then pounced into its neck, slicing it open and killing the Monoclonius. Parast then ate his fill and set off for the long journey back to the nest.
